In this work we have attempted to characterize the functions of the major sulphydryl-containing proteins of the rat liver Golgi complex. 2. The effect of the presence of glutathione on the activity of these proteins was analyzed using an in vitro assay in which [14C] cystine-glutathione disulfide is reduced by a glutathione-dependent methionine sulfoxide reductase of rat liver cytosol. 3. The order of sulphydryl susceptibility of the major sulphydryl-containing proteins of the Golgi complex was as follows: transmembrane (125I) and soluble (125I) glycoprotein disulfide isomerases greater than transmembrane (125I) gamma-glutamyltransferase = (125I) glutathione S-transferase = (125I) succinate semialdehyde dehydrogenase = (125I) ornithine aminotransferase, and (125I) puromycin-sensitive nucleoside phosphotransferase. 4. The sulphydryl protease inhibitor, phenylmethylsulfonyl fluoride, was used to indicate that the sulphydryl-dependent protease activity of the major sulphydryl-containing proteins of the Golgi complex was not affected by the presence of reduced glutathione. 5. These results suggest that at least three types of sulphydryl-containing proteins are associated with the Golgi complex: (i) redox-sensitive proteins whose function may include redox regulation of some of the glycosyltransferase enzymes, (ii) redox-insensitive proteins whose function may include sulphydryl donor or acceptor roles in sulphydryl-mediated protein-protein interactions, and (iii) enzymes whose active sites are inherently redox sensitive.
