I actually tried a lot of these features, and whether or not I agree with some of them is not what I'll be discussing. I have been a Photoshop user of 15+ years, and have been closely following the Photoshop development for those same years. I uploaded hundreds of images to Flickr, used the Web sharing tool from the File menu that automatically brings photos to Flickr (now you can also add a caption and descriptions and tags to your photos if you want), and used the photo editor on my desktop. "I know the ins and outs of Photoshop" is not what I want to convey, but rather "what can Adobe do with this?" Photoshop has a feature that has been part of the program from very early on, and it's a feature that is more valuable than most users realize.
